

The Indiana No-Call list has been a Godsend. Because I have had transactions with a business does not mean I should have to tolerate intrusions into my private life for their advertising purposes. The no-call list should mean exactly that! "Do not call me".

Additionally, many of us work off-shifts. These calls are the equivalent of calling a day worker at 3:00am. I wonder how these bankers would react if I called them in the middle of the night? So please, consider that my home is my sole private domain and I want to keep it that way.

Apparently these businesses don't understand:

"Don't call me, I'll call you"

This should also go for other operations that have managed to get themselves on the exemption list through pure political clout.

Thank you,
